Natixis selected the third Gustave Roussy research team in line with its sponsorship of the Institute

Since 2012, Natixis has been working with Gustave Roussy, a European cancer treatment center, to support the creation of three new basic research teams for a period of 3 years. The team of Dr. Mehdi Khaled is the third and last team to get the support of Natixis as part of its sponsorship. This team is researching the melanoma.

Dr. Mehdi Khaled will join Gustave Roussy in July 2013 after spending seven years at the Harvard Medical School (Boston, USA). He will head a team that will be researching “Melanoma and tumor invasion”.

The melanoma is a dreadful type of cancer because the high risk of cancer metastasis. The research project of Dr. Mehdi Khaled is to identify the genes that are responsible for the development of cancer metastasis and to identify the molecules that can block these genes by way of large scale screening. This research will lead to developing anti-metastasis treatment for the melanoma, which do not exist at this point, and to improving existing therapies.

The melanoma is a serious form of skin cancer that is steadily growing. There are 9,700 new cases in France and 1,600 deaths every year. When detected at an early stage, it can be cured. But at an advanced stage, it becomes life threatening.

Understanding why and how this cancer generally metastasizes is the challenge faced by Dr. Mehdi Khaled and his research team.

The two other teams selected in line with Natixis’ sponsorship are the team of Dr. Jean-Luc Perfettini on “Cell death and senescence” related to radiotherapy - announced in December 2012 - and the team of Dr. Fanny Jaulin researching the formation and dissemination of the colon cancer metastasis - announced in April 2013.
